SUPPORTING DREAMS

"The Little Girl on the Bus" - The story of Ashmita by Papa

"Who is that little girl, with the big, round, brown eyes; so clear and hopeful looking, sitting in the 8th row?" I asked one of the girls near me as I called out names of the girls I knew should be on the bus. There was a woman in the 4th row clutching goods wrapped in a shawl, avoiding my eyes, sitting next to two small kids. Obediently quiet, they were seeking a ride to Bhutwal, three hours distant. "Perhaps she is with her," the girl replied.

That was almost seven years ago... her name is Ashmita.

She has two dreams she recently told me; one is to live forever with us, and the other is to find her mother, just to see her. The latter dream we tried to make happen this last Dashain, when a woman who might be her mother had been tracked down to a remote village quite far away, near India. Arrangements were made for Ashmita to travel with people we know and trust, to see if this is true. Sadly, it wasn't.

Ashmita returned to Dhapasi with the same effervescent smile as always; I told her that I was sorry that she did not find her mother. "That's okay," she said smiling. "It wasn't my first dream, and I know that dream will come true."
